A: You're performing a plain HTTP GET request. "" But there's a lot of confusion over what this means. One thing you can be sure of is that any one of those links (or any other that you find here) can't be the resource you want, because only the part after "http" and before "?page=3" is the part of the resource that will answer your question. I read this, on another site: HOW TO SEND UPDATES Enabling to automatically download content is a really great way to reduce bandwidth usage. We assume that users are smart enough to periodically use the media torrent downloads, and only prefer the torrent page to download updated packages. Now you can make the torrent page refresh its data when the update appears. How to enable this, is a separate question. It seems to be a feature of many sites that has fallen out of use over the years. I don't recommend you use this. To answer your question, this is the link: Raiden has two builds of the "raiden" 1.2.4.2: 1) "raiden"Â 1.2.4.2, a stable build with no updates. 2) "raiden"Â 1.2.4.2-beta, a beta release with minor updates. Raiden doesn't offer a "daily" build. I don't think anyone does. In this case, the one with "1.2.4.2" is the stable version. If you download it from "Sliwi's gallery", it's at this link: I don't know if that link has the information to tell you the exact download time of the torrent. You might get lucky and find the torrent there. In which case you could simply disable all auto-downloads, and disable auto-refresh of that particular page. I repeat, it's not the recommended way to do this 50b96ab0b6

What I do is: springBean.setDate(new Date()); springBean.getDate(); I got can only use setter or getter in this, any way to make getDate() and getDate_lookup() have different setter and getter? A: One approach is to create a wrapper class which implements both getDate and setDate methods. Something like this: public class Date
